74 No doubt. Someone will come forward in a few years...wanting a book deal or something. Their 15 minutes of fame. I'm wondering why the sergeant-at-arms resigned right after Jan. 6. Why did two cops commit suicide? Seriously. I'd like to know a little bit more of their backstory. Where were they the protest?

17 ▼ that may have been the senate side. the other side looked brutal. I saw the footage of the "insurrectionists" walking between the velvet ropes but I also saw total pandemonium in another part of the bldg.

5 ▼ A few days after, a Pedo posted footage of maybe 15-20 people going at what looked like the Capitol Police.

It was indoors and possibly a hallway, with maybe 5 of the people outright swinging fists.

That is all I have seen of the "storming" and "rioting."

For as many people who were on the Mall that day, there was suprisingly little happening for an Insurrection.

It's all double-speak and everyone knows it.

3 ▼ You might be thinking of the crowd just inside the Main Portico (arched entrance). Massive steel doors at the outside entrance were open already but inside there is a space underneath the porch above, then some rectangular metal doors with reinforced glass leading into the hallway.

Capitol Police massed inside pushing against the doors and the crowd pushed back. The Brit Daily Mail tabloid posted brief video and description of the struggle which is mentioned here, search page for 'portico'.

An officer gets caught in the door and the guy facing him sympathizes, even reaches out and flips the officer's face shield back in place. I don't really see Antifa presence here a bunch if QTards who thought they were going to 'arrest' people and seemed clueless the Capitol Police wouldn't stand down and join them. I understand this shoving match ended with police tossing flash bangs into the hall dispersing the crowd and the entrance held

1 Well, here's one: <https://www.bbc.co.uk/news/av/election-us-2020-55564421>

Note that the people at the front of the push are using hands-on-back of their colleagues to stay together. That was an organised group.

(Before people dogpile me: I didn't say who organised it.)

The footage that appears immediately after the comical 'armed' comment on this clip is part of what I was actually looking for - there was a segment a couple of minutes long that expanded on this tiny snip: https://youtu.be/UXR\_bqyAy4E?t=147

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ibWJO02nNsY> includes that same Rotunda melee but does end up making you laugh at the constant descriptions of 'rioters' as they wander peacefully down hallways. It's also got footage I hadn't seen before of the person that shot Ashli Babbit.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ozpB89tbEKM> repeats that footage and adds some more.

Most of the violence is outside the building but there was violence inside, and there absolutely was a forced entry, even if other people were able to also just wander in.

25 Who rolled up 2 layers of snow fence neatly an hour before the crowd arrived? Who turned the barricades on 1st Av sideways? It was either the SS or Antifa.

22 ▼ You know what I'm most disappointed about? Conservatives all over were disavowing the January 6 thing that same night. In fact, they were denouncing it while there.

I understand it being a setup and all, but 99% of conservatives are so afraid of people thinking that they're willing to fight for what they believe in. Today's conservatives are all talk and no action. Not just our members of Congress. Maybe that's why people keep voting in the RINOs. Because they match up perfectly to talking big, but never actually making any progress.

Why are we losing the culture war? Why is the country becoming more liberal by the day? It's because conservatives are too afraid to have a spine.

When they come for the guns, conservatives always say that they'll fight and threaten. But January 6 is proof that that's not at all what will happen. What WILL happen. 100% will. Is that conservatives WILL give up their guns, but will say, "Okay, but I'm calling my congressman." I know this for a fucking fact. You all know this is what's going to happen. There will be no fight.

Yeah, I feel like the secret service could have just whacked Trump at any moment if they were that st. I did hear about Trump keeping his own security like ,4 years ago. He had to have trusted the people carrying guns around him.

▼ Secret Service is huge - each team is very compartmentalized, so Biden has an entire USSS team as does Trump, but you can imagine they probably feel quite differently about things based on who they are protecting. Biden also replaced a lot of his detail already and installed his own guys in the USSS as well, so he already has people embedded into that service already. the USSS has employees in the thousands, so its not like its some singular secret service team, its an entire organization with as much deep state as everywhere else.

▼ link / video?

My theory is the FBI was the primary ones behind the event. They're in the right position to set this up, and we have evidence of them giving bad information to various Law Enforcement agencies. They also had to be aware of this before the fact, and there appear to have been law-enforcement embedded in the riot, perhaps to keep an eye on it. Somebody also enticed people on the Q-boards into participating, which again is something the FBI has done on many occasions.

The secret-service seems like the wrong agency, but I could be wrong.

▼ SS in charge of on the ground mechanics?

permalink parent save report block reply

▼ The FBI being behind this seems like a much more logical explanation, due to (1) their history of inciting people to criminal acts and (2) the FBI is more than aware of and monitors the Q-boards, and (3) the FBI knew the event was pre-planned, and told capital police and others to reduce security.

The secret-services is mostly interested in protecting specific individuals, and don't really have any investigatory powers outside of that. The secret service isn't a huge organization. I also haven't yet heard of the secret service engaged in illicit acts, whereas you can find many such examples and evidence about nearly all other organizations like the NSA, CIA, and FBI. The FBI also appears to have very, very, very strong loyalties to the DNC.

It's definitely possible, but it just seems there are numerous simpler and more logical explanations. If there's good evidence it was actually mostly the secret service driving this event though, I certainly wouldn't discount it immediately though.

The Vice President was in the building. Secret Service had no perimeter set up, no observation posts for the VP's security, and people were literally banging on the door before they evacuated the VP from the Senate Chamber.

I am just glad Trump has his own private security teams in place for his own security. It is said they can take the Secret Service to school on situational awareness and security measures.
